Intersectional Matrices

Six intersections · systems that require simultaneous dismantling of all constituents

Intersectional Matrices are systems that can only be dissolved by dismantling all constituent Fundamental Matrices simultaneously. This chapter covers six: Capitalism, The Romantic/Sexual Script, Familism, Nationalism, Colonialism/Imperialism, and Theocratic Moralism — each with a Main Triad, Structural Residues, and Canon that no single constituent would produce alone.

CHAPTER 20 OF AN ONGOING FRAMEWORK

Intersectional Matrices

This chapter covers all six intersectional matrices in one chapter, per the framework's outline. An intersectional matrix is a system that can only be dissolved by dismantling all its constituent Fundamental Matrices simultaneously. If the constituents are not dismantled together, the remaining constituents will recreate the intersection — often in a modified form that is harder to recognise and challenge.

Each intersection is studied through three elements: (a) a Main Interpersonal Triad that no single constituent would produce alone (this triad is allowed to extract and enforce simultaneously), (b) Structural Residues that no single constituent would produce alone, and (c) Canon that no single constituent would produce alone, with the Internalised Authority and Internalised Oppression (and Internalised Domination, if the intersection produces Stratification) that this canon uniquely produces.

The six intersections are: Capitalism (Enclosure + Productivism + Rankism + State Sovereignty), The Romantic/Sexual Script (Cisheteropatriarchy + Amatonormativity), Familism (Adultism + Kinship Normativity), Nationalism (Ethnic Majoritarianism + Territorialism), Colonialism/Imperialism (Invasion + Settler Colonialism + Coloniality), and Theocratic Moralism (Religious Dominance + Retributivism).

READING NOTE

Same convention as Chapters 1 through 19. Every paragraph is written to be tweetable. This chapter does not have fill-in-the-blanks because each intersection is a combination of matrices that have already been individually examined. The framework's point here is to show what the combinations produce that the individuals alone do not.

INTERSECTION 1

1. Capitalism (Enclosure + Productivism + Rankism + State Sovereignty)

Main Interpersonal Triad

The wage-labour triad. The employer (backed by State Sovereignty's monopoly on violence and Enclosure's privatisation of resources) extracts surplus labour (Productivism) from the worker (ranked below by Rankism). This triad extracts and enforces simultaneously: it extracts surplus labour while enforcing the productivity standard. No single constituent would produce this triad alone.

Enclosure alone would privatise resources but would not demand productivity. Productivism alone would demand productivity but would not enforce property. Rankism alone would rank the employer above the worker but would not extract surplus. State Sovereignty alone would claim monopoly on violence but would not direct it toward the protection of property. The four together produce the wage-labour triad: the employer, backed by the state's violence, extracts surplus from the worker, who is ranked below and required to be productive.

The Nigerian example: the Dangote Group, backed by the state's economic policies and the police's protection of its property, extracts surplus labour from thousands of workers who are ranked below the management and required to meet productivity targets. The worker who strikes is met by the police (State Sovereignty). The worker who produces is rewarded by the wage (Productivism). The worker who is promoted is ranked above (Rankism). The worker who is fired loses access to the means of subsistence (Enclosure).

Structural Residues

The corporation as a legal person. No single constituent produces this. Enclosure supplies the property. State Sovereignty supplies the legal personhood. Productivism supplies the productive purpose. Rankism supplies the internal hierarchy. The corporation is a legal person that owns property, produces goods, ranks its workers, and is protected by the state's monopoly on violence — a residue no single constituent would produce.

The labour market. No single constituent produces this. Enclosure supplies the commodification of labour (the worker must sell labour to survive because resources are privatised). Productivism supplies the demand for productivity (the worker must be productive to be employed). Rankism supplies the ranking of labour (the manager ranks above the worker). State Sovereignty supplies the enforcement of contracts (the state enforces the employment contract). The labour market is a residue no single constituent would produce.

The financial system. No single constituent produces this. Enclosure supplies the commodification of money. Productivism supplies the demand for investment. Rankism supplies the hierarchy of credit (the rich borrow at lower rates). State Sovereignty supplies the central bank and the currency. The financial system is a residue no single constituent would produce.

Canon

The Canon that the market is natural, that profit is the purpose of economic activity, that the employer-employee relationship is the only legitimate economic relationship, and that the state's role is to protect the market. No single constituent would produce this Canon alone. Enclosure supplies 'property is natural.' Productivism supplies 'work is the purpose of life.' Rankism supplies 'some are meant to lead and some to follow.' State Sovereignty supplies 'the state protects the order.' Together they produce the Canon of the market as natural order.

Internalised Domination (the intersection produces Stratification): the employer's entitlement to surplus, the capitalist's entitlement to profit, the state's entitlement to enforce the market.

Internalised Authority: the right to hire and fire, the right to set wages, the right to demand productivity, the right to call the police on strikers. Internalised Oppression: the worker who believes they must sell their labour, the worker who believes the market is natural, the worker who believes profit is the employer's right.

INTERSECTION 2

2. The Romantic/Sexual Script (Cisheteropatriarchy + Amatonormativity)

Main Interpersonal Triad

The romantic-sexual couple triad. The man (ranked above by Cisheteropatriarchy) extracts domestic, sexual, and emotional labour from the woman (ranked below by Cisheteropatriarchy) within the couple-form (enforced by Amatonormativity). This triad extracts and enforces simultaneously: it extracts domestic and sexual labour while enforcing the couple-form. No single constituent would produce this triad alone.

Cisheteropatriarchy alone would rank the man above the woman but would not enforce the couple-form. Amatonormativity alone would enforce the couple-form but would not rank the man above the woman. The two together produce the romantic-sexual couple triad: the man, within the couple, extracts domestic, sexual, and emotional labour from the woman, who is ranked below and required to be coupled.

The Nigerian example: the husband who expects the wife to cook, clean, bear children, and provide sexual access, while the wife is told by family, church, and society that she must be married (Amatonormativity) and must submit to her husband (Cisheteropatriarchy). The wife who refuses is told she is failing as a woman (Cisheteropatriarchy) and failing as an adult (Amatonormativity). The two matrices together produce a triad that neither would produce alone.

Structural Residues

The nuclear family as the only legitimate household form. No single constituent produces this. Cisheteropatriarchy supplies the gendered roles within the household. Amatonormativity supplies the couple-form as the only legitimate relationship. Together they produce the nuclear family as the only legitimate household: the heterosexual couple with gendered roles, living together, raising children, with no other household form recognised.

The marriage contract as the only legitimate sexual relationship. No single constituent produces this. Cisheteropatriarchy supplies the heterosexual requirement. Amatonormativity supplies the couple-form requirement. Together they produce the marriage contract as the only legitimate sexual relationship: sex within heterosexual marriage is legitimate; sex outside it is sin, crime, or deviation.

The gendered division of domestic labour. No single constituent produces this. Cisheteropatriarchy supplies the gendered roles (woman as caregiver). Amatonormativity supplies the couple-form as the context (the couple as the household). Together they produce the gendered division: the woman does the domestic labour within the couple, and the couple is the only legitimate household.

Canon

The Canon that the heterosexual romantic couple is the natural family unit, that marriage is the only legitimate context for sex, that the man is the head and the woman is the helper, and that the single person is incomplete. No single constituent would produce this Canon alone. Cisheteropatriarchy supplies ‘the man is the head.’ Amatonormativity supplies ‘the couple is the natural unit.’ Together they produce the Canon of the heterosexual romantic couple as the natural family.

Internalised Domination (the intersection produces Stratification because Cisheteropatriarchy produces it, even though Amatonormativity alone does not): the man’s entitlement to the woman’s body, labour, and obedience within the couple. Internalised Authority: the right to demand sex within marriage, the right to demand domestic labour, the right to control the partner’s movements. Internalised Oppression: the woman who believes she must marry, the woman who believes she must serve, the single person who believes they are incomplete.

INTERSECTION 3

3. Familism / The Nuclear Family System (Adultism + Kinship Normativity)

Main Interpersonal Triad

The family triad. The parent (ranked above by Adultism) extracts obedience, deference, and caretaking from the child (ranked below by Adultism) within the blood-and-marriage family (enforced by Kinship Normativity). This triad extracts and enforces simultaneously: it extracts obedience and caretaking while enforcing the blood-and-marriage family. No single constituent would produce this triad alone.

Adultism alone would rank the adult above the child but would not enforce the blood-and-marriage family. Kinship Normativity alone would enforce the blood-and-marriage family but would not rank the adult above the child by age. The two together produce the family triad: the parent, within the blood-and-marriage family, extracts obedience and caretaking from the child, who is ranked below by age and bound by blood.

The Nigerian example: the father who demands the adult son consult him before any major decision (Adultism) and who demands the son prioritise the family over his own chosen relationships (Kinship Normativity). The son who refuses is told he is disobedient (Adultism) and disloyal to blood (Kinship Normativity). The two matrices together produce a triad that neither would produce alone.

Structural Residues

The nuclear family as the only legitimate social unit. No single constituent produces this. Adultism supplies the adult-child hierarchy within the family. Kinship Normativity supplies the blood-and-marriage boundary around the family. Together they produce the nuclear family as the only legitimate social unit: the blood-related, married-couple household with the adult in charge.

The legal parent-child relationship as the only legitimate caregiving relationship. No single constituent produces this. Adultism supplies the adult's authority over the child. Kinship Normativity supplies the blood relation as the basis. Together they produce the legal parent-child relationship as the only legitimate caregiving: the biological parent has legal authority; the chosen caregiver does not.

Inheritance through blood lines. No single constituent produces this. Adultism supplies the generational hierarchy (elder passes to younger). Kinship Normativity supplies the blood line as the channel. Together they produce inheritance through blood: the property passes from parent to child by blood, excluding the chosen family and the non-biological caregiver.

Canon

The Canon that the family is the natural social unit, that blood is thicker than water, that the parent owns the child, and that the chosen family is illegitimate. No single constituent would produce this Canon alone. Adultism supplies ‘the parent knows best.’ Kinship Normativity supplies ‘blood is thicker than water.’ Together they produce the Canon of the blood-and-marriage family as the natural social unit with the parent as owner.

Internalised Domination (both Adultism and Kinship Normativity produce Stratification, so the intersection does too): the parent’s entitlement to the child’s obedience, the elder’s entitlement to the junior’s deference, the blood family’s entitlement to the member’s loyalty. Internalised Authority: the right to discipline the child, the right to decide the child’s future, the right to demand filial piety. Internalised Oppression: the child who believes they must obey, the child who believes blood is thicker than water, the chosen family that believes it is illegitimate.

INTERSECTION 4

4. Nationalism (Ethnic Majoritarianism + Territorialism)

Main Interpersonal Triad

The nation-state triad. The ethnic majority native (ranked above by both Ethnic Majoritarianism and Territorialism) extracts political power and resources from the ethnic minority migrant (ranked below by both). This triad extracts and enforces simultaneously: it extracts political power while enforcing the ethnic-territorial classification. No single constituent would produce this triad alone.

Ethnic Majoritarianism alone would rank the ethnic majority above the minority but would not enforce the territorial origin. Territorialism alone would rank the native above the migrant but would not enforce the ethnic identity. The two together produce the nation-state triad: the ethnic majority native, the ‘son of the soil,’ extracts political power and resources from the ethnic minority migrant, who is ranked below by both ethnic group and territorial origin.

The Nigerian example: the Hausa-Fulani indigene of Kano who claims the governorship as ‘our turn’ (Ethnic Majoritarianism) and who tells the Yoruba resident of three generations to ‘go back to your state’ (Territorialism). The Yoruba resident is ethnic minority (Ethnic Majoritarianism) and territorial non-indigene (Territorialism) simultaneously — a double subordination that neither matrix alone would produce.

Structural Residues

The nation-state as the only legitimate political unit. No single constituent produces this. Ethnic Majoritarianism supplies the ethnic identity as political category. Territorialism supplies the territorial origin as political category. Together they produce the nation-state: the territorial unit governed by the ethnic majority native, with the ethnic minority migrant as subordinated.

The indigene certificate as the gatekeeping instrument. Produced by both but uniquely combined: the certificate requires both ethnic origin (Ethnic Majoritarianism) and territorial origin (Territorialism) to prove belonging. The person who has the right ethnic group but the wrong territorial origin, or the right territorial origin but the wrong ethnic group, cannot obtain the certificate.

The federal character principle as inadequate response. Produced by both but uniquely insufficient: the principle addresses both ethnic balance (Ethnic Majoritarianism) and territorial representation (Territorialism) but does not address the intersection — the ethnic minority migrant who is subordinated by both matrices simultaneously.

Canon

The Canon that the nation belongs to the ethnic majority native, that the minority migrant is a guest, and that the state exists to serve the ‘sons of the soil.’ No single constituent would produce this Canon alone. Ethnic Majoritarianism supplies ‘the majority has the right to rule.’ Territorialism supplies ‘the native has the right to the territory.’ Together they produce the Canon of the nation as the property of the ethnic majority native.

Internalised Domination (both produce Stratification, so the intersection does too): the indigene’s entitlement to rule, the native’s entitlement to resources, the ‘son of the soil’s’ entitlement to the state.

Internalised Authority: the right to demand the indigene certificate, the right to exclude non-indigenes, the right to the ‘go back’ demand. Internalised Oppression: the minority migrant who believes they are guest, the non-indigene who believes they must accept, the ethnic minority who believes they cannot rule.

INTERSECTION 5

5. Colonialism/Imperialism (Invasion + Settler Colonialism + Coloniality)

Note: Settler Colonialism never reached maturity in Nigeria — British colonialism was extractive rather than settler in character. This intersection is studied in the Nigerian context with the understanding that the Settler Colonialism constituent is present in nascent and fledgling forms but not in adult form. The intersection is also studied in the context of other countries (Israel-Palestine, South Africa, the United States, Australia, Canada) as a warning.

Main Interpersonal Triad

The imperial triad. The foreign power (Invasion) extracts resources and, where Settler Colonialism has matured, existence from the locals, while leaving structural residues and ascension ritual mechanisms (Coloniality) that form their own independent systems after the invasion has ended. This triad extracts and enforces simultaneously: it extracts resources and existence while enforcing foreign standards. No single constituent would produce this triad alone.

Invasion alone would extract resources but would not leave the residue that forms independent systems. Settler Colonialism alone would replace the local but requires Invasion to arrive. Coloniality alone is the residue but requires Invasion (and in some cases Settler Colonialism) to produce it. The three together produce the imperial triad: the foreign power extracts, replaces where possible, and leaves a residue that persists long after the foreign power has formally departed.

The Nigerian example: the British invaded (Invasion), extracted resources through the mining and agricultural export economy, imposed the colonial state and the colonial education system, and left at independence in 1960. But the structural residues (the colonial-era laws, the English language, the Western epistemic standard, the colonial Christianity, the light-skin beauty standard) and the ascension ritual mechanisms (the Canon that the West is the source of knowledge, the Practice of daily English use) persisted as Coloniality — independent systems that continue to operate long after the British have departed.

Structural Residues

The colonial-era state structure that persists after independence. No single constituent produces this. Invasion supplies the imposition. Settler Colonialism (where present) supplies the replacement logic. Coloniality supplies the residue. Together they produce the colonial-era state structure that persists: the colonial police, the colonial courts, the colonial bureaucracy, the colonial constitution — each inherited at independence and retained without dismantling.

The colonial-era legal system that persists. No single constituent produces this. The Criminal Code 1916, the Marriage Act 1914, the Land Use Act 1978 (which displaced customary land tenure), the English common law that governs Nigerian commercial disputes — each is a residue of the intersection of Invasion (which imposed the law), Coloniality (which preserves the law as Canon), and (where present) Settler Colonialism (which replaces indigenous law).

The colonial-era education system that persists. No single constituent produces this. The English-medium school, the Western curriculum, the examination system, the university structure — each is a residue of the intersection. Invasion imposed the system. Coloniality preserves it as Canon. The result is an education system that teaches in English, uses Western textbooks, and measures knowledge by Western standards, decades after independence.

Canon

The Canon that colonialism was civilising, that the colonial state was natural, and that post-colonial independence was sufficient (because it did not dismantle Coloniality). No single constituent would produce this Canon alone. Invasion supplies ‘we brought civilisation.’ Coloniality supplies ‘the colonial arrangement is natural.’ Together they produce the Canon that colonialism was civilising and that independence was sufficient.

Internalised Domination (all three produce Stratification, so the intersection does too): the foreign power’s entitlement to extract, the coloniser’s entitlement to rule, the colonial-trained elite’s entitlement to succeed the coloniser. Internalised Authority: the right to extract, the right to rule, the right to define. Internalised Oppression: the colonised who believes colonialism was civilising, the post-colonial subject who believes independence was sufficient, the Nigerian who believes the colonial state is natural.

INTERSECTION 6

6. Theocratic Moralism (Religious Dominance + Retributivism)

Main Interpersonal Triad

The theocratic triad. The religious authority (ranked above by Religious Dominance) extracts obedience and financial contribution from the subject (ranked below) while enforcing religious law as state law (Retributivism). This triad extracts and enforces simultaneously: it extracts obedience and tithes while enforcing religious law through state punishment. No single constituent would produce this triad alone.

Religious Dominance alone would rank the religious authority above the subject but would not enforce religious law through state punishment. Retributivism alone would enforce punishment but would not frame the punishment as divine requirement. The two together produce the theocratic triad: the religious authority, backed by the state's punitive apparatus, extracts obedience and tithes from the subject, who is ranked below by religious identity and punished by retributive law.

The Nigerian example: the Sharia penal codes in twelve northern states, where religious law (Religious Dominance) is enforced as state criminal law (Retributivism). The Khadi who sentences the accused to amputation for theft is exercising both religious authority (Religious Dominance) and state punishment (Retributivism). The accused who is sentenced is subordinated by both matrices simultaneously — a double subordination that neither matrix alone would produce.

Structural Residues

The religious court as a parallel legal system. No single constituent produces this. Religious Dominance supplies the religious authority. Retributivism supplies the punitive apparatus. Together they produce the religious court: a court that adjudicates by religious law and punishes by state power. The Sharia court in northern Nigeria is the paradigm.

The blasphemy law as religious Retributivism. No single constituent produces this. Religious Dominance supplies the concept of blasphemy (the insult to religion). Retributivism supplies the criminalisation (the punishment for the insult). Together they produce the blasphemy law: the state punishes the person who insults religion. Criminal Code Section 204 and Penal Code Section 382 are the Nigerian examples. The Deborah Samuel lynching (May 2022, Sokoto) and the Mubarak Bala sentencing (April 2022, 24 years) are the Nigerian consequences.

The religious police as parallel state. No single constituent produces this. Religious Dominance supplies the religious enforcement. Retributivism supplies the punitive purpose. Together they produce the religious police: a parallel police force that enforces religious law. The Hisbah in northern Nigeria is the paradigm — a state-funded religious police that enforces Sharia-compliant behaviour.

Canon

The Canon that religious law is supreme, that blasphemy is a crime, that the religious leader has the right to punish, and that the secular state is subordinate to religious authority. No single constituent would produce this Canon alone. Religious Dominance supplies ‘religious law is supreme.’

Retributivism supplies ‘punishment is justice.’ Together they produce the Canon of the religious leader as both spiritual authority and punitive enforcer.

Internalised Domination (both produce Stratification, so the intersection does too): the religious authority’s entitlement to obedience and punishment, the religious majority’s entitlement to define blasphemy, the religious leader’s entitlement to the state’s punitive apparatus. Internalised Authority: the right to define blasphemy, the right to punish blasphemy, the right to enforce religious law.

Internalised Oppression: the subject who believes they must obey religious law, the subject who believes blasphemy is a crime, the subject who believes the religious leader has the right to punish.

CONCLUSION

7. Conclusion: The Simultaneity Principle

The framework's key insight from this chapter is the simultaneity principle: intersections can only be dissolved by dismantling all constituent Fundamental Matrices simultaneously. If the constituents are not dismantled together, the remaining constituents will recreate the intersection — often in a modified form that is harder to recognise and challenge.

The framework's outline gives the example: defunding the police while leaving Retributivism, Enclosure, and State Sovereignty intact simply produces private militias. The police are dismantled, but the matrices that the police enforced are still in place. The remaining matrices (Retributivism, which demands punishment; Enclosure, which privatises resources; State Sovereignty, which claims monopoly on violence) will find new enforcers — private militias, vigilante groups, corporate security — and the intersection (Capitalism, which requires all four) will regenerate.

The same logic applies to every intersection. Dismantling Cisheteropatriarchy while leaving Amatonormativity intact produces same-sex couples who still enforce the couple-form. Dismantling Adultism while leaving Kinship Normativity intact produces adult children who are still bound by blood. Dismantling Ethnic Majoritarianism while leaving Territorialism intact produces territorial natives who still exclude migrants. Dismantling Invasion while leaving Coloniality intact produces post-colonial states that still operate on colonial infrastructure. Dismantling Religious Dominance while leaving Retributivism intact produces secular states that still punish.

The simultaneity principle is why the framework treats abolition as the goal, not reform. Reform dismantles one matrix while leaving the others intact, guaranteeing regeneration. Abolition dismantles all the matrices simultaneously, preventing regeneration. The framework's point is not that this is easy — it is extraordinarily difficult — but that it is the only path to 'zero,' the point at which all oppressive systems have been abolished and suppressed in perpetuity.

WHAT COMES NEXT

After this chapter, the framework continues with the Aggregations chapter: Beauty Standards (all fundamental matrices that enforce appearance standards, aggregated), Manufactured Loneliness (all fundamental matrices that possess an intrapersonal domain causing slow death, aggregated to isolate people and produce loneliness by sabotaging the intimacy model at each step), Social Death / Invisibility (multiple fundamental matrices that produce classification, aggregated), Burnout / Exhaustion (all fundamental matrices that extract labour, aggregated), and Accelerated Slow Death (all fundamental matrices with a stable intrapersonal domain, aggregated). After Aggregations, the Other Topics of Note chapter follows: Proximity to Elite / Classism, Oppression Olympics, and The Problem with Communism.
